About the American Academy of Environmental Engineers

By the mid-1950's, a few leading environmental engineers recognized that the profession would be enhanced by establishing a process similar to medical specialty certification which provided benefits for the public and the medical profession alike. In 1955, they created an organization to implement a certification process for environmental engineers that embraced all areas of environmental practice such as water supply engineering, air pollution control engineering, wastewater treatment, etc.

These visionaries were members of the Joint Committee for the Advancement of Sanitary Engineering, a combined effort of the American Public Health Association, American Society for Engineering Education, American Society of Civil Engineers, American Water Works Association and the Water Environment Federation. These organizations founded and sponsored the American Academy of Environmental Engineers.
